THE INDUSTRY, COMPETITION, AND MARKET

A careful analysis of the market and competitive forces in this industry is a key element in assessing the business potential of our project. This analysis will provide marketing and sales data that are indispensable to develop the business potential optimally. The main competitors are medium and large trading companies in the international environment with a similar selection of products and services and comparable size. Since the planned project is of international scope with a single headquarter the competitive analysis will have to focus on the international and local market. The market and competition analysis will be based on the entire market.

PRIMARY COMPETITORS

The competitive environment is primarily determined by the choice of item groups but also the regional location. But regardless of the selection of items high mark-ups are not feasible in the long run since this will attract competitors who compete away any rents. With a high density of businesses in one location businesses with the highest marginal cost will be driven out of the market. Such locations will yield a return of 12 - 14% on average. This is the expected equilibrium return in a saturated market. To further analyze the competitive environment it is necessary to define the players in that environment. A firm that generates $300,000 to $1,000,000 in revenues and employs 5 to 10 people should regard a firm with revenues and personnel 3 times this figures as viable competitor. On the product and service side, businesses with a comparable selection of offers are regarded competing in the same market segment.
